BIMSTEC Summit: Foreign ministers agree on projects worth $50b - Source: The Financial Express

The foreign ministers of BIMSTEC countries have agreed to identified and agreed to push forward 167 various connectivity-related projects at an estimated cost of $50 billion. The ministers of the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation (BIMSTEC) countries agreed to approve projects on Wednesday. They gave approval of the ambitious plan following a detailed study by the Asian Development Bank, reports the Kathmandu Post. The member states are developing Bimstec Transport Connectivity Master Plan, with a goal to complete it by the end of September 2018, Nepalese Foreign Minister Pradeep Gyawali told the Nepalese daily. Gyawali said, "Several multilateral donor agencies are interested to put money in this master plan." "We have received interest from ADB, World Bank and other multilateral agencies to push these projects," he added. The ADB study included transportation and cross-border facilitation, multimodal transport and logistics, infrastructure development, aviation, maritime transport, human resources development, as well as communication linkages and networking, reports AP. The Bimstec Transport Infrastructure and Logistic Study (BTILS) was updated by the ADB in 2014. Out of 167 projects, the study has prioritised 66 projects. During the ministerial meeting, Gyawali stressed on the need to deepen, rather than proliferate, areas of cooperation among the member states. He also called on his counterparts to focus on connectivity, trade, tourism, energy, and agriculture. The meeting of the seven-nation group also underlined the establishment of BIMSTEC Permanent Secretariat in Bangladesh; Bimstec Cultural Industries Observatory (BCIO) in Bhutan; and Bimstec Centre for Weather and Climate (BCWC) in India as some of the key achievements in institutional development. Representatives from the member states also endorsed the text of draft Summit Declaration and recommended that to the heads of state for approval. In line with the Bimstec practice, the foreign minister of Nepal handed over the chairmanship of the Bimstec ministerial meeting to the state minister for foreign affairs of Sri Lanka, where the 17th ministerial meeting will be held next year.
